PROFILE

I remember the feeling of awe when I wrote my first Hello World program at the age of 12. I was amazed, and I knew that, over time, I could learn to build anything I wanted.

When I became a teenager, I forgot about my passion for programming and ended up at the University of Toronto studying psychology. During my second year, I decided to take the winter semester off.

I then had the opportunity to rediscover my passion for programming. Ever since, I have been learning the skills required to be a web developer.
